

Annual Report

Dear ABFE Members and Supporters,

I am pleased to share ABFE's 2023 Annual Report with you and offer a few reflections as context about our work last year and moving forward.

ABFE is in a strong position. Facilitated by the success of our 50th-anniversary campaign, we have been able to deepen member engagement to channel resources towards strengthening Black-led and serving organizations and institutions. While the political climate's rife with division, attacks on equity and justice, and violence both within and outside of our borders, we remain focused and steadfast in our efforts to uphold our mission: to promote effective and responsive philanthropy in Black communities. Our strength is fueled by the close to three hundred new foundation and nonprofit sector leaders who joined ABFE in 2023, indicating our continued leadership and relevance in the field.

This report outlines several of our 2023 highlights as well as ABFE's impact and influence in the field. I encourage you to review this document and share your feedback on what resonates with you. Regardless of how we plan our annual work, ABFE is called to respond to current issues and events facing our community. 2023 was no different – the heightened attacks on democracy, racial equity, and justice, fueled by the gutting of Affirmative Action in the Spring of last year, required us to make space and time to organize the field. In partnership with others, we took leadership to design opportunities for the field to strategize and "scenario plan" about ways to navigate the hostile political environment. Most importantly, we fashioned a strategy for the field inclusive of building legal supports for racial justice grantees in the face of possible lawsuits, a narrative campaign to legitimize racial equity work, and the creation of a knowledge center on strategies to navigate the hostile climate. This work will continue long into the coming years.

We are excited about member engagement to grow investments in Black communities within our new funder networks including the Black Communities Funder Network and the Corporate Community of Practice. We look forward to seeing you all at Harambee in St. Louis for stimulating programming, and we are excited to grow ABFE's Board of Directors by adding three new members this year. In 2024, we will also unveil new partnerships with members to increase investments in Black power-building and serving nonprofits and institutions. We will do this work as we navigate a tough election cycle, as well as continued efforts to dismantle diversity, equity, and justice. Closer to home, ABFE will continue to be a safe place for Black professionals in the field of philanthropy as the "world" happens around us. I encourage all of us to stay alert, informed, and grounded in the strength of those who have come before us. Wishing you peace and progress.

ABFE Tribute

It is with deep sadness that we pay homage to our ABFE ancestors and continue to commit our work on the legacy in which they've paved.

Ambassador James A. Joseph, an ABFE Founder rises from a segregated upbringing in Louisiana to a distinguished career, significantly impacted civil rights, U.S. foreign policy as Ambassador to South Africa, and the Council on Foundations. His legacy, marked by service across four U.S. presidencies, academia, and corporate social responsibility, continues to inspire through ABFE's James A. Joseph Lecture and Awards, celebrating and recognizing Black excellence in philanthropy.

Ira Hall, an ABFE Founder and pioneering corporate leader, as IBM's first Black corporate officer leaves a legacy of national service, racial justice, and diversity. From his civil rights activism to his transformative role at the Adkins Center, his enduring impact, felt in roles such as governor of the United States Postal Service and as a Stanford University trustee, inspires ABFE's continued dedication to diversity, equity, and impactful philanthropy.

Carrolle Perry Devonish, a former ABFE Board Member and James Joseph Lecture Award winner, leaves a profound legacy as the first Black woman director at the Philadelphia Foundation, where she significantly shaped community philanthropy. Her dedication to ABFE's mission, influential Perry phase, focused on fostering community partnerships through substantial grants, and her role as a mentor in the philanthropic community, will continue to inspire our commitment to philanthropy and community service.

Hugh C. Burroughs, a revered ABFE Member and former Board Chair, profoundly impacted Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) through his work at the John Hay Whitney Foundation, highlighting funding disparities and directing significant resources to Black higher education. His legacy, stretching from Columbia University to the Berry Gordy Family Foundation, is marked by his transformative contributions to community service and the development of organizations like the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation.

ABFE's Impactful Journey in 2023

ABFE made remarkable strides in reaching our vision of being central to a movement of grantmaking entities, donors, and nonprofits in improving outcomes for Black communities and the country as a whole. Through our groundbreaking initiatives and strategic partnerships, ABFE continues to catalyze transformative change, empower communities and institutions to dismantle systemic barriers and drive inclusive progress. Below is a quick snapshot of our major impact milestones:

Development of the Racial Equity Advancement and Defense Initiative (READI) in partnership with racial equity partners. READI reflects our dedication to dismantling systemic inequities and ensuring that our work remains at the forefront of driving meaningful change in the philanthropic and nonprofit sectors.

Release of "Philanthropy and HBCUs: Foundation Funding to Historically Black Colleges and Universities", done in partnership with Candid, catalyzed increased support from major foundations and drew attention from the White House and various international media outlets. We believe this report has helped to spark increased funding to many HBCUs since its release.

ABFE + Catchafire

Partnered with Catchafire to offer all of our Black-led nonprofit members free access to their web-based wrap-around services and skills-building support.

“ We are so grateful for the support that we have received from Catchafire. The first meeting we had when we joined ABFE described the benefits of Catchafire and immediately we thought it would help us out. We were able to connect with volunteers who we helped us further refine our mission, vision and values and who are helping us clarify our organizational structure. The folks we have partnered with have been very communicative and helpful. The experience has been incredibly rewarding, we will continue to ask for help from Catchafire volunteers and we would highly recommend Catchafire to any organization looking for support.

— JOSUE PERA, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, AFROLATIN® FORUM

In 2020, we launched a strategic plan that centered on ABFE's commitment to promote effective and responsive philanthropy in Black communities. The following four strategic pillars are part of our $25M campaign priorities. Here's a quick snapshot of the activities and initiatives that ABFE organized in 2024, as illustrated in our strategic framework.

Organize Collective Investments in Black-led Social Change to Build Political and Economic Power.

- In response to a pivotal 2023 Supreme Court decision to overturn Affirmative Action, ABFE launched the Racial Equity Advancement and Defense Initiative (READI). This initiative includes the development of a resource bank, aimed to equip the philanthropic and nonprofit sectors with essential tools for navigating legal frameworks while passionately advocating for racial justice.
- ABFE also developed and launched its CHAMA initiative, featuring impactful collaborations that not only amplified funding for Black-led nonprofits but also systematically dismantled philanthropic barriers. CHAMA is ABFE's endeavor to build and strengthen funder collaboratives, expanding the flow of philanthropic dollars to Black-led organizations, while reducing silos, leveraging regional grantmaking dollars, and sustaining investments in high-impact nonprofits.
- Through collective investment in Black-led social change, ABFE continues to cultivate political and economic power, reshaping landscapes for a more just and equitable future.
